Trove: librarian guide

Welcome
Oxford’s Trove sites are intuitive websites with navigation and functionality that is straightforward to use. We’ve put together this short guide to help you and your students get the most from it in a short time.
Contact Hadlee Bennett on hadlee.bennett@oup.com, tel: 07903 739574 for direct advice.

Access
You and your students need to be logged into your university network to gain access.

Use the “Sign in via your institution” option in the left hand login box on the homepage and follow the instructions.

Personal profile
To create a personal profile go to the “sign in” button on the top menu. Students will need to set up a personal profile to experience the full functionality of the Trove sites.

Directing reading and VLE integration
By default you and your students will have access to all current content on the Trove sites (only old editions will not be accessible). So in order to direct your students effectively we recommend using DOI (digital object identifier) links when prescribing work or linking to content.

DOI links are visible at book or chapter level.

Use this string, prefaced with https://dx.doi.org/ to create the full DOI link.

Wider resources

It’s possible to navigate to resources beyond the Trove sites.

Beneath the jacket of each title a button offers to “Find Print Edition in Library”.

The sites also feature a “Find this resource” button in Further Reading lists at the end of chapters.

Metadata about the bibliographic reference is passed to the catalogue via an OpenURL resolver, and the relevant results from the library are shown (e.g. print/online, and whether they are available to borrow or out on loan).

Metadata from Law Trove and Politics Trove is live within EBSCO, OCLC, Summon and ExLibris.

As a librarian you may need to change the URL preferences to the address for your e-catalogue in your SAMS account.

Accessibility
Our Trove sites comply with applicable law relating to accessibility. Read our statements on Law Trove and Politics Trove.
